THE RAT BAIT INCIDENT

A reader recently came to us in alarm at the shirt editorials in a nearby daily newspaper were taking and wondered if that paper was going to support Roosevelt this fall.

In reply, we can point out that no real newspaper will give any administration blind support on any or every detail of government. There is no newspaper worthy of the name shutting its eyes to defects and mistakes of government merely because this party or that is in the saddle.

This newspaper along with virtually every other newspaper in the state will seek and support the entire Democratic ticket this fall, But if and when we disagree with specific acts or policies of the administration, we intend to be bluntly outspoken about it.

For example:

A current news release from the WPA of Virginia, Richmond, tells of an allotment of $5,116 for a project in Portsmouth, Va., to distribute and place rat bait on premises of residences and business houses. This is listed an increased allotment, so evidently Uncle Sam is determined to rid Portsmouth of RATS.

Well, the Times Virginian doesn't think that the rat menace in the city of Portsmouth is a matter for the federal government to handle. We can see no obligation on the part of Uncle Sam to see that the homes in Portsmouth are free of RATS or that Portsmouth meat markets have no flies or that Portsmouth house doors don't squeak. If there is any such obligation, why link the RAT CAMPAIGN to the City of PORTSMOUTH? Are the rats of Appomattox, Evergreen and Pamplin to be ignored. Why not send an army of federal fly swatters to Vera, and/or Spout Springs, and if you argue the obligation of the federal government to supervise a personal matter like a RAT IN THE ATTIC, pray tell us where the use of city or state government comes in?

We end this article by asking a riddle:

Will putting workers on the payroll to set rat traps of the city of Portsmouth help Mr. Hamilton or Mr. Darden.

GREEN VS LEWIS

The menacing controversy between the American Federation of Labor and the group headed by John L. Lewis, head of the Mine Workers Union, is a squabble over who shall collect DUES from the skill workers and other workers of the nation.

One favors craft unions. The other favors organization by industries. Both are determined that the worker must pay tribute. It's just a question of whether it goes to the Lewis group or the Green group.

John L. Lewis is now staging a strenuous drive to HERD the laborers into HIS fold. Once they are made to join, the scheme is to get the employers to recognize the Closed Shop . . . which means that workers MUST keep on paying DUES to Mr. Lewis if they are to earn their bread and butter.

The plot goes deeper than that. This is a presidential election year. Roosevelt wants and needs the support of organized labor. So Mr. Lewis plays his trump card. . . "Back us in this fight and we will deliver organized labor's vote and if we have to call strikes and tie up Industry, feed 'em with relief funds."

It seems to be a vital matter concerning the entire nation, and yet the American people have no voice in its solution.

LEADING THE WORLD

Another Fourth of July has come and gone. There was a minimum of official observance this year. But we trust that the reminder of the principle of Independence and personal liberty was not completely overlooked.

Here's what 160 years of application of the creed of independence has brought America:

America has only 7 per cent of the world's population. Yet we produce half its foodstuff. We have nearly half the world's commercial facilities and nearly half of its railroads and electric energy. We produce 92 per cent of the world's automobiles. Fourteen million of our families own their own homes. There are nearly Fifty million savings accounts; Thirty one million life insurance policies. And so the record goes.

It would appear folly to look to Europe for ideas of government. Our own American ideas have produced results.

Hectic Days Sleepless Nights
IF YOU are nervous today, you probably will not sleep well tonight. If you don't sleep well tonight, you will probably be nervous tomorrow.
Don't allow yourself to become nervous. Take Miles Nervine. Relax your tense nerves and let you get a good night's sleep.
Irritability, Restlessness, Sleeplessness, often lead to Nervous Headache, Nervous Indigestion, Dizziness, leading to a nervous breakdown and organic trouble.
Some of the people, whose letters are printed below, were as nervous as you are—possibly more so—yet they have found relief.
"Three years ago I was so nervous I could not bear to go out in company and could not sleep nights. A friend recommended Dr. Miles Nervine. I now enjoy myself thoroughly and sleep every night. Mrs. Ida Carrier, New Market, N. H.
"I have used Dr. Miles Nervine in liquid form and find it the best medicine for the nerves I have ever used. Mrs. Christene Lasiter, Middleton, Tennessee
"Whenever I am over-indulged and feel restless I take one or two Nervine Tablets just before I retire. In the morning when I awake I feel like a new person and can eat breakfast with relish as usual. Dr. Miles Nervine Tablets are a splendid medicine to build me up and are the simplest, most convenient tablets to take I have ever found. Miss Cora Redmond, St. James, Minn.
"Before using your Nervine I was very nervous and irritable. Since I have started to take it I feel so much better that my family notice the difference. I will take it regularly in time and be free from spells. Mrs. Reddick, 2217 16th Ave., Rock Island, Ill.

DEMO CONVENTION IS COLORFUL AFFAIR

Roosevelt and Garner Are The Whole Show at Philadelphia Convention

By W. C. WEBBER

Convention Hall, Philadelphia.—"Franklin Delano Roosevelt for President—!"

Philadelphia's monster convention hall rocked as 18,000 delegates and spectators leaped to their feet roaring approval of their standard bearer in the coming election. It was a jubilant, spontaneous outburst, the beginning of a demonstration seldom equalled in convention history, and the climax of four days' waiting by most of the delegates.

All through this rather tame convention, the name of Roosevelt was magic. The somewhat apathetic audience, judged by convention standards, could be stirred into animation only by the utterance of his name. But the demonstrations on those occasions left nothing to be desired. They were not the carefully-managed, chairman-directed affairs of other conventions held in the past, but the heartfelt expression of people to whom the Democratic candidate is the hope of country and party. Up would rise the State standards as the chairman, delegates and alternates swarmed into the aisles—a cheering, dancing, singing throng. The giant organ and the brass band perched high on the west side of the convention hall would be drowned out in the tumult—and the convention chairman could helpless until the demonstrations finally would wear themselves out.

Is Colorful Scene

All the usual trimmings of a national political convention were on hand at Philadelphia. The approach to the convention hall cluttered with the customary army of hawkers of novelties which ranged all the way from souvenir buttons to pseudo-brass horns—the milling mob of onlookers anxious for a glimpse of the great and near great—badges, badges everywhere, and more badges—all were there.

Inside the hall a shouting singing, laughing crowd filling every seat—the usual spotlights playing on the scene—telegraph boys rushing copy from the press sections where perspiring newspaper workers toiled at the task of catching the next edition —movie cameramen and newspaper photographers swarming over the hall—Indian war bonnets—the gaily decorated platform—pictures of the candidates—State standards—microphones—flags and bunting—the blaring brass band and the rumbling organ that never quite get together on any tune—the wild applause when every State is played—a typical convention scene.

Platform Holds Interest

There was no doubt as to the final nominations—or that the convention would unanimously endorse the New Deal as Franklin D. Roosevelt and John N. Garner in a unanimity that has not been accorded a Democratic ticket since Cleveland was nominated.

Since there were no other candidates, chief interest was centered in the platform and in the delegation of the Democratic party's two-thirds rule which has governed nominations since the party was founded.

The platform was completed only after a 13-hour session of the subcommittee held behind closed doors. Chief difficulty was in evolving a satisfactory wording of the party's stand on the constitutional amendment issue. Full pressure of radical groups was brought to bear, but without effect. The final draft omitted this flat declaration, but left the question largely open to whatever action might be taken by party leaders during the coming campaign.

Formation of this plank was one of the events that did not run according to schedule. Anticipating difficulty only from the conservative quarter, Senator Robert Wagner of New York, had selected as members of the drafting group six New Deal Senators, one ex-Senator, two administration officials, two delegates with liberal tendencies, and Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts, the only conservative, but one who is sufficiently practical to recognize the overwhelming odds of 11 to 1.

The labor plank was something of a surprise to many who had looked for a more definite declaration. After pointing out various New Deal accomplishments, the plan reads:

"We will continue to protect the worker and we will guard his rights, both as wage earner and consumer, in the production and consumption of all commodities including coal and water power and other natural resource products."

A demand from organized labor that the party agree to support a constitutional demand which would invalidate any Supreme Court decision that was not arrived at by at least a six to three vote, fell on barren soil.

However, it is considered as fairly certain that President Roosevelt will deal more specifically with these questions in his forthcoming campaign. The way has been left completely open for action by the candidate without him being bound by specific hampering platform declarations.

Promise Public Works

Determination to proceed with the public works program in dealing with unemployment is also voiced by the party declaration. More than five million people have been re-employed, according to the platform, but where private business is unable to cope with the problem, work prevailing wages should be provided in cooperation with state and local governments on useful public projects.

There was much speculation as to what would be the exact wording of the plank dealing with civil service. The Cleveland convention had brought this issue into prominence, and it was necessary that the Democratic party express its views on the subject. Immediate extension of the merit system through the classified civil service to all non-policy-making positions in the Federal service was pledged. The party also declared for placing all continuing positions which have been exempt from its operation under the civil service law.

Protection of consumer, extension of rural electrification, continuance of the housing program, enforcement of criminal and civil provisions of the existing anti-trust laws, and strengthening of the latter by new legislation were also pledged.

Rumors Run Riot

The question of sound money came in for its share of the rumors. Guesses, most of which came from "authoritative sources" ranged from unrestricted inflation to an immediate return to the gold standard were rife. The final platform draft states that while the party approves of a permanently sound currency so stabilized as to prevent wide fluctuations in value, it believes in a currency which will "permit full utilization of the country's resources." Reduction in government expenses which will eventually permit a balanced budget and reduction of the national debt were also pledged.

Best received of the convention speeches in the opinion of many was the keynote address of Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky. His exoriation of the Republican party and praise of the New Deal accomplishments was genuine political oratory which combined all the arts of sarcasm, humor, logic and pathos in a skillful blend which aroused the audience to wild enthusiasm. He contrasted his attack on the record of the Republican party during the twelve years prior to 1932, the policies of Herbert Hoover while in office, and the Liberty League. Little mention was made by him of the current Republican candidates.

Scene Landon

The latter task was left for Senators Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, who spoke in the role of a delegate-at-large instead of that of permanent chairman. Delay in the report of the credentials committee was responsible for this unusual change. Robinson charged that Landon is preparing to bolt the Republican platform, citing his famous telegram to the Cleveland convention which he pointed out, was sent only after the nomination was assured. Robinson also scored the Supreme Court for its ruling invalidating the Guffey soft coal control law and New York State's minimum wage law.

The only real trouble within the convention hall came when a group in the gallery displayed banners proclaiming Al Smith as a real Democrat. No sooner had the banners been unfurled than fist fights broke out in the sections where the Al Smith banners were exhibited. Order was quickly restored, and most of the disgusting group left the hall.

Mack Nominates Roosevelt

Enthusiasm in the convention hall reached its maximum Friday when Judge John E. Mack of New York placed the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt in nomination. The delegates let loose a delirium of sound that almost tore the top off the sound meter which stood at the left of the stage. The demonstration which followed made all previous affairs of this kind look weak. It was a genuine tribute to a party leader.

John Nance Garner, Texas wild, was nominated for the office of Vice-President on Saturday morning by a jubilant, yelling convention. Ten gallon hats sailed through the air as the Texas delegation whooped it up for the State's favorite son. Garner is genuinely popular with the rank and file of the Democratic party, and the convention left no doubt about it.

But even this demonstration did not compare with that of Saturday night when Roosevelt delivered his acceptance speech at Franklin Field, huge stadium of the University of Pennsylvania. All through the week the demand for tickets to this event had far exceeded the supply, and when Roosevelt mounted the platform the big bowl was packed. As he took his place at the speaker's stand, the famous Roosevelt smile showed brightly, but to those close enough to see there seemed to be more than pleasure mirrored in the nominee's face. When the crowd gave full vent to its delight in their chosen leader, if there was a shade of plainness in Roosevelt's eyes, he could hardly be blamed. No man could receive such a tribute and remain untouched.

JOHN N. GARNER

necessary for the enactment of Federal or State laws "adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety and safeguard economic security." It is understood that President Roosevelt desired to win from the committee a plank sufficiently vague in its language to permit him either to advocate or ignore the issue surrounding the adoption of such an amendment.

Ignore Labor Demand

Other points in the platform which had been awaited with deep interest, particularly those dealing with agriculture and with labor, were left equally open to future action by party leaders. The section on agriculture pledges a continuance of soil conservation and domestic allotment programs, recognizes "the evils of farm tenancy" and pledges the full co-operation of the government in long term refinancing of farm indebtedness at the lowest possible rates of interest, and encourages practical farm co-operatives.

The labor plank was something of a surprise to many who had looked for a more definite declaration. After pointing out various New Deal accomplishments, the plan reads:

"We will continue to protect the worker and we will guard his rights, both as wage earner and consumer, in the production and consumption of all commodities including coal and water power and other natural resource products."

A demand from organized labor that the party agree to support a constitutional demand which would in-
